Route Directions: Starting at the launch site, head out to the little river and turn left to paddle upstream. Passing Euchee Creek where the sand bar is formed, you can continue to the top of the island. Either float back the same direction you came or go out into the Savannah River. Floating down the Savannah, you will pass under the railroad tracks, to then merge towards the right and find the end of the island. Paddle up the little river to return to Betty's Branch.

STAY SAFE

USE CAUTION

This area is controlled by dams. This trail is always manageable by travelers but water typically moves faster later in the day, making it more difficult to paddle against the current. Understanding the area and direction of flow is crucial to keeping you safe and from getting worn out paddling back up river if you go too far down.

USE CAUTION

- Snakes may be in the water and or in tree branches above as you paddle.
- DO NOT get out of your kayak on the island to feed or pet the donkeys or goats. It is protected property and the animals may get aggressive.
- DO NOT paddle this route if the water is moving very fast, which can happen sometimes after big rains & release from the Dam.

STAY CLEAR OF

- Canal Headgates + Waterfall - the launch spot and take out is very close to the Augusta Canal Headgates. Always avoid getting close to the intake and the Fall line (waterfall) as the current picks up and you could be swept over or under!

The launch site for Stallings Island requires a walk on level surface of about 200 yards. Be prepared to carry kayaks or bring a small kayak dolly with wheels.

Stallings Island is protected property as it is a National Historic Landmark. Trespassers may receive a trespassing ticket and anyone digging or removing artifacts will serve jail time. The island is equipped with security cameras.
